(DSC) Foundations of Sociological Thought

Dr. Arvind N. Haldankar
Associate Prof. in Sociology

Field Concept

It goes without saying that societies are swept by global currents of change. Primitive societies too are not exceptions to such a change. Scholars working on the social dimension of change have broadly conceptualized it as social evolution. We have amidst us a multitude of doctrines, laws and theories offered by a galaxy of proponents on evolution. One such proponent is Herbert Spencer, the early and chief architect on evolution. The Spencerian perspective lays emphasis on the growth of societies from simple to complex. At this juncture, it becomes pertinent to look into the growth processes of the so called traditional societies and to reflect upon their present standing.

In the backdrop of this discussion, the students of Third Year Bachelor of Arts programme reading the course (Foundations of Sociological Thought) propose to undertake a field study of settlements in tribal dominated areas of Cotigao Wild Life Sanctuary.

Objectives:

- To conduct Sociological and anthropological inquiries to ascertain the nature of evolution
- To understand the processes of change affecting the tribal societies
- To identify the stages of differentiation at which the societies are placed
- To contextually evaluate the Spencerian evolutionary paradigm

(DSE) Sociology of Migration

Mr. Keval Naik

Assistant Prof. in Sociology

Field Concept

Migration is a social reality of the distinct past and present in human society. Humans migrate for the better prospects of life and to explore the new possible ways to live in a healthier environment. Migration is not just movement of people but it also carries various other aspects of social life which include culture, traditions, norms, values, customs, and duties. Over a period of time, migration has a great impact on the sending society as well as host society. The most common type of migration present in the society is rural to urban migration; this hypothesized component is present in tribal hamlets of Cotigao Wild Life Sanctuary.

Aim

The broad aim of this field visit is to allow students to understand the process of migration

With reference to above concept, the students of Third Year Bachelor of Arts programme reading the course (Sociology of Migration) propose to undertake a field study of settlements in tribal dominated areas of Cotigao Wild Life Sanctuary.

Objectives:

To study the social background of migrants

To identify the pattern of migration in tribal hamlets

To explore livelihood changes due to migration
